Chronic digestive diseases

Chronic digestive diseases are long-term disorders and include, amongst others: digestive cancers, chronic liver diseases, inflammatory bowel disease (IBD), coeliac disease, food allergies, gastroesophageal reflux disease, peptic ulcer disease and functional gastrointestinal disorders, such as irritable bowel syndrome (IBS) and non-ulcer dyspepsia.

These diseases continuously inflict a heavy healthcare and socio-economic burden upon every nation in Europe. They often affect patients at a younger age and result in a loss of economic productivity and personal well-being through significant mental, as well as physical, impact.

Across the EU:

Chronic liver diseases affect almost 30 million people

Digestive cancers are responsible for 28% of cancer related deaths

Over 3 million people are affected by IBD

High levels of alcohol consumption, increasing levels of obesity and poor nutritional choices across Europe are predicted to worsen, suggesting the burden is only going to become greater.

However, there is strong evidence that many chronic digestive diseases are preventable and, therefore, a shift of focus from treatment to prevention of digestive diseases is essential. Leading an active lifestyle, making healthy nutritional choices, reducing the intake of alcohol, and screening for colorectal cancer or viral hepatitis and liver cancer (in at-risk patients) can all reduce the risk of developing chronic digestive diseases.

The role of family doctors

Primary care physicians have a vital role to play in reducing the burden of chronic digestive diseases and to improve digestive health outcomes. Key actions that can be taken in primary care settings include:

- To investigate, diagnose, explain and treat the vast majority of chronic digestive disease cases in the primary care setting
- To promote public understanding of chronic digestive diseases, including their associated symptoms and risk factors to ensure early diagnosis and intervention
- To promote healthy and active lifestyles among patients, consisting of regular physical activity
- To provide patients with informed dietary advice and interventions, including reducing alcohol intake
- To encourage uptake and participation in organised colorectal cancer screening programmes and programmes to detect viral hepatitis and liver cancer in patients at risk
- To provide psychological, as well as physiological, support for patients and to help reduce unnecessary, but frequent, stigmatisation for patients

Reducing the burden

UEG and WONCA Europe call on family doctors to recognise and work towards excellence in the prevention, as well as treatment, of chronic digestive diseases.

Together, we have the opportunity to strengthen our medical community and improve public health across Europe to ensure the lifelong wellbeing of all citizens.

The European Society for Primary Care Gastroenterology

The ESPCG was established in 1996 by a group of academic general practitioners with an interest in gastroenterology.

Today, the ESPCG is at the centre of European Primary Care Gastroenterology, represented on key committees and providing a voice that is heard by decision-makers Europe-wide. The ESPCG is a member of both Wonca and UEG.

UEG, United European Gastroenterology, is a professional non-profit organisation combining all the leading European medical specialist and national societies focussing on digestive health.

Our member societies represent more than 30,000 specialists from every field in gastroenterology. Together, we provide services for all healthcare professionals and researchers, in the broad area of digestive health. The role of UEG is to take concerted efforts to learn more about digestive disease by prevention, research, diagnosis, cure, and raising awareness of their importance.

WONCA is an acronym comprising the first five initials of the World Organization of National Colleges, Academies and Academic Associations of General Practitioners/Family Physicians.

WONCA Europe is the European Regional Branch and the academic and scientific society for general practice/family medicine in Europe. Our mission is to improve the quality of life of people through fostering high standards of care in general practice/family medicine. We represent 47 member organisations and more than 120,000 family doctors in Europe, and support the professional development, research, education and quality improvement of general practice/family medicine, through our networks and special interest groups.
